be called upon for service to the community. Failure to respond to such a call is punishable by a fine or jail sentence. However, a man can pay the daily wage of a substitute if desired. When the task is a relatively small one and more men are called up than are needed for the actual work, some are asked to contribute food or drink instead of labor.

The better-to-do families generally do not participate in the village cuatequitl, since they consider such work beneath their dignity and prefer to pay for substitutes. The main source of labor for the village cuatequitl are the poor who cannot afford substitutes or fines. The men from the smaller and poorer barrios have the reputation of being the most industrious and reliable workers for the cuatequitl. This is related to the fact that they have little political influence and have greater fear of the authorities.

The village cuatequitl is organized in terms of the eight demarcaciones or wards into which the village is divided. The ayudante or representative of each demarcación is ordered to announce a cuatequitl in his ward, and specific men are designated to appear at a given time and place. The attendance of the men is checked by the ayudante from his list.[11] Sometimes, when men are needed at short notice, more direct means are used to assure successful recruitment.

In a recent boundary dispute with the municipio of Tejalpa, the authorities posted aides at all the roads and paths leading out of the village to intercept the men as they went to their fields early in the morning. In this way 600 men were recruited in one day, and they were set to work to cut through the forest overgrowth which covered the disputed boundary line. In this case, since it was a municipio boundary, men from the other villages were also recruited. Other instances of inter-village cuatequitl have occurred in the repair of bridges which are used in common.

In recent years there have been very few village cuatequitls of major importance. In 1934 some work was done to improve the market place. The last important village cuatequitl was organized in 1926–27 while Redfield was in the village.[12] At this time, under the initiative of the local political faction known as the Bolsheviki, communal washbasins were constructed. (See Fig. 20.) During the twenties, political feelings ran so high and cleavages were so marked that members of the opposition group refused to work in cuatequitls organized by those in power. Fines were out of the question at the time because authority could not be enforced.

During the early thirties, when political schisms were still strong, there occurred an unusual type of voluntary village cuatequitl for the construction of the road to Cuernavaca. Led by two enterprising non-Tepoztecan schoolteachers and with the backing of the colony of Tepoztecans in Mexico City, the villagers decided to build a road to Cuernavaca. The two political factions, the Bolsheviki and the Frater-nales, refused to work side by side, and each organized separate shifts, one beginning at Tepoztlán and working toward Cuernavaca, the other working from Cuernavaca toward Tepoztlán.

[12] Before the Revolution, when there was more money in the local treasury and when the local government was in the hands of caciques whose tenure was quite stable, there were many more cuatequitls than now.

Although the village cuatequitl is intended as a means of aiding the village as a whole, there are many obstacles to its successful operation, and it is gradually declining. Perhaps the fundamental difficulty is the inherent individualism of Tepoztecans, the suspiciousness and critical attitude toward the local government, and the paucity of local funds. The village cuatequitl has been traditionally associated in the minds of the villagers as a coercive rather than a voluntary institution. This may be the result of having lived under an authoritarian system in which the local government had been imposed for years. Since the local government, generally the síndico or the president, has the power to designate the citizens who are to work in the cuatequitl, there is ample opportunity for favoritism and vengeance against political opponents or personal enemies.

It may be significant in this connection that children in their games will often say, "Unless you do this I will give you your cuatequitl," suggesting that the cuatequitl is viewed as a punishment. It should also be noted that historically the existence of a native institution for collective labor was a distinct aid to the Spanish conquerors in their organization and control of the labor supply.

The second type of cuatequitl is the barrio cuatequitl. This is the collective working of the lands of the barrio saints. Barrio members are expected to cooperate in the preparation of the land, planting, cultivating, and harvesting of the crops from the saints' field. The sale of the produce goes for the upkeep of the local chapel. In contrast to the village cuatequitl, participation in the barrio cuatequitl is entirely voluntary. The barrio mayordomo goes through the barrio announcing at each house the time of the cuatequitl. While there are no fines or penalties for non-
